MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Briefing on Intelligence School/OTR
 31 May 1968 - 1500 Hours

25X1

25X1 2. [redacted] conducted his briefing by speaking to a quite complete Briefing Guide which is attached hereto.

[redacted]

4. The course with the largest student body for FY 1968 has been the Introduction to Intelligence, which was given eight times for a total enrollment of 531 students. Another course of particular interest to the DD/S is the Orientation for Overseas, which is a two-day, 16-hour briefing given nine times during the year to 190 employees and dependents going overseas for the first time.

5. [redacted] mentioned as problems in his School three particular items:

(1) The lack of promotions for professional personnel -- This is not entirely an OTR problem since many of his faculty are on rotation from other directorates and simply have not been promoted by their parent directorate.

(2) In many cases they have been spreading their personnel assets too thin and have therefore had to cut back on some course offerings.

(3) The School has had several rehabilitation cases to handle, and while these have not been major problems, they do necessitate extra time and attention.

6. The meeting adjourned at 1550 hours.

Major Training Areas

1. Intelligence Orientation. Orientation programs for professional employees of the Agency are conducted at two levels:

a. Introduction to Intelligence -- a program designed to give the student an understanding of the nature of National Intelligence, of the structure and functions of the Intelligence Community, of the role of the Agency within the community, and of the functional organization through which the Agency meets its responsibilities.

b. Intelligence Review -- a program designed to give the experienced intelligence officer a thorough understanding of recent developments and trends in the National security structure, in intelligence doctrine, and in Agency-wide missions and objectives.

2. Intelligence Production Skills and Techniques. Programs are given in the application of the writing and briefing skills to intelligence problems; in the availability, capability, and exploitation of intelligence information repositories and other types of sources; in the techniques and methodologies used in producing the component categories of intelligence which constitute National Intelligence; in Community-wide coordination procedures; and in the dissemination of finished intelligence.

3. Area Study. Two kinds of area study programs are conducted:

a. Orientation to overseas areas -- designed to acquaint Agency employees and their adult dependents with the problems of overseas living, with the methods of adaption to local foreign cultures, and with the individual areas in which they will live and work.

b. Geographic studies -- designed to give the intelligence officer -- primarily but not exclusively the intelligence analyst -- a thorough understanding of the geographic factors which affect the development and national capabilities of a given foreign area.

4. Briefing Service. The Intelligence School provides a briefing service for both internal Agency requirements and external USIB and non-USIB requirements. Generally this service consists of providing individuals or groups with appropriate information on the mission, function, and organization of the Agency, on the Agency's role in the Intelligence Community, and the Agency's contribution to the total National Security effort.

Consumers of Intelligence School Programs

All Intelligence School programs, except those developed specifically for the Career Training Program, are available to employees of all Agency components. Although the programs in production skills and techniques are designed primarily for those officers who produce finished intelligence, many officers in the operations and support fields find them useful.

Career Training Program

The Intelligence School provides three of the major segments of the OTR Career Training Program:

1. Introduction to Intelligence -- a two-week, full-time course designed to give Career Trainees a thorough understanding of the nature of intelligence and of the Agency's role in the national security structure.

2. Intelligence Techniques -- a three-week, full-time course designed to give all Career Trainees a general understanding of the techniques and methodologies employed in the production of finished intelligence. The rationale of this course is that every career trainee, regardless of the area of his eventual work assignment, will understand his specific job better if he understands the utilization of intelligence sources and assets in the Agency's major product.

3. Intelligence Production -- a nine-week, full-time course designed for those Career Trainees whose initial work assignment will be in the intelligence production areas of the Agency -- the DDI and the DDS&T. This course is an exploration in depth of the problems of producing finished intelligence. The course is primarily a combination of live problem solving and at-the-desk observation of, and discussion with, the working analysts in the various producing components.

Intelligence School Budget

The budget of the Intelligence School for Fiscal Year 1968 was about 3.5% of the OTR budget.
